

RBLACT donation to Combat Stress

Legion Group's parent company, The Royal British Legion Attendants Company Trust (RBLACT), is donating over £62,000 to the ex-services Mental Welfare Society, Combat Stress. The donation will help fund the costs of employing a Regional Welfare Officer for the England North West region for the next two years.

Combat Stress exists to serve men and women of all ranks from the Armed Forces and the Merchant Navy suffering from psychological disability as a result of their service. Through their national network of welfare officers they visit veterans at home in order to establish how best Combat Stress can help improve their quality of life. The organisation also provides treatment centres to help people cope with their disabilities. Each year Combat Stress has to raise the costs to cover its regional welfare support services through charitable donations.

“Legion Group are proud to be associated with RBLACT and the valuable work of Combat Stress, “ commented Daniel Atkinson, Legion Group Managing Director. “This donation is a tangible way of demonstrating to our customers that by choosing Legion as their service provider they are indirectly helping ex servicemen and women to re-settle into civilian life.”
